

A young father of five is bereaved instantly. No pre-emptive suffering. No good bye. No long term illness. Nothing. He finds hope in the words of a soldier from the Iraq War. They meet regularly each Wednesday, over dinner, for six months. From her the young father learns there is hope. And what that hope involves. In the end, the father learns truths, some painful, some to elicit great joy. He also learns to avoid toxic association in the very people he trusted implicitly. When someone is bereaved they need prayer and practical help. They need that help in the form of ones who are good listeners. They need their family needs to be respected, not looked down on...
