

The endeavor has been made herein to give an account of the encyclopedia in two ways. In a long list at the end the chief articles are enumerated in alphabetical order, with indication as to illustrations, so that by running through these the variety and extent of ground covered by the encyclopedia can be gathered at once. In addition, I have in the earlier of these pages classified the majority of the articles thus indexed in some sort of logical order. In making a selection of 2,000 articles out of 16,606, some may have been omitted which others would have included, and doubtless several have been included which others would have omitted., I can only state that every care has been taken to make the selections representative. It will, of course, be understood that the engravings accompanying the present text are specimens of only the smaller illustrations contained in The Jewish Encyclopedia. Joseph Jacobs.
